

CATHOLIC OPINION.

The Catholic Advocate on the New York Riot.

[From the Catholic Advocate, edited by Hon. B. J. Welch.]
The act of interference with the Orange procession was as much a blunder, or a series of blunders, as it was a crime. In the first place, the Hibernians blundered in supposing that the annoyance to which they doubtless conceived themselves subjected, could be best, or at all suppressed through the application of physical force. There is not a profound thinker, in or out of their own country, will not tell them that Orangemen owe their life at this day, as in Ireland in the United States, to precisely such attempts to suppress it as has resulted in the killing and maiming of some two hundred people in New York on Wednesday of last week. It is opposition that has made the society formidable. The advice of the Archbishop of New York, addressed to Catholic Irishmen, was, "let those Orangemen alone; let them severely alone; let them parade till they are tired." There was as much of true philosophy in this advice as of regard for the best interests of the flock committed to his charge, and very sure we are, that no practical Catholic who listened to his voice on the occasion referred to, had anything to do with the outbreak we are all deploring. Those who banded together to attack the Orangemen, and thereby to bring disgrace, as far as they could, upon their Catholic name and their Irish lineage, were men already separated from the church by their overt acts of disobedience to her well-known laws.

From our heart of hearts do we abominate the principle upon which, as we understand it, has been founded the association known as the "United Order of Orangemen of Great Britain and Ireland." It is a little soul, indeed, which is unable to lift itself above the desire to wound the religious, social or political sensibilities of another by irritating demonstrations. But this is a free land, and we have yet to see the intelligent Roman Catholic, native or foreign-born, who was disposed to regret that his lot had been cast among a people devoted to those principles upon which rest as a basis, free government and the largest liberty consistent with public order. The Orangemen of New York, if they chose to do so, had undoubtedly the right to parade the streets of that city on the 12th of July, or any other day, and to be protected by the constituted authorities in the enjoyment of their right. We do not say that in deciding to flaunt their yellow insignia in the faces of their proverbial foes, the Hibernians (the attaches of an organization equally detestable in our eyes as their own), they acted in a manner becoming to them either as Christians or as good citizens. Not at all. Had the members of either organization been actuated by a spark of patriotic feeling, or of pure religion, there would have been no outbreak in New York on the 12th of July, for good men to mourn over. It was not love of country, either of the land of their birth or of adoption, that induced either the Orange display or the attempt made by the Hibernians for its prevention. Much less was either party actuated by any pure religious motive. It was passion, pure and simple, that induced the Orangemen to get up their insulting display, and it was passion, pure and simple, that urged the Hibernians to make fools of themselves by opposing that which was under the protection of the laws.

What lessons are Irish Catholics to learn from the late outbreak in New York? The most important lesson it teaches, as we conceive, refers to the dangerous character of certain secret associations that have been formed in this country, of which they have been invited to become members. An evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit. The Church is wiser than the leaders in these organizations, and she condemns them. This should be enough for the Catholic. But who can fail to see, after having been a witness of the folly and crime of which the members of one of these associations were guilty the other day in New York, that they are only instruments of evil in the hands of bad men? Another lesson to be learned from the late outbreak is this: Evil is not to be overcome by evil, but by good. The influence of the enemies of Catholicity in this country has only been strengthened by the occurrence upon which we are commenting. If the Hibernians have any regard for Catholicity, well may the faithful of the whole country exclaim, "Save us from our friends."

On July 1, 1801, 70 years ago, one of the first steamboats ever built made a trial trip on the Thames. This is the account of it given by the London papers of the day: "An experiment has taken place on the river for the purpose of working a barge or any other heavy craft against wind and tide by means of a steam engine, of a very simple construction. The moment the engine was set to work, the barge was brought about answering her helm quickly; and she proceeded at once to make way against a strong ebb tide at the rate of nearly two miles and a half an hour."

"My daughter I want you to stop talking; you must wait until you are spoken to." "Ma," answered the child, "if every one should wait until they were spoken to, how could any one talk."

An Irishman recently soliloquized: "What a waste of money to buy male, when you know that the half of it is gone, while you can spend it for rum that hasn't a bone in it."

An Iowa minister's daughter runs up store bills, and with an innocent abandon tells the dry-goods men to "charge it to the man her father is working for—Jesus Christ."

A drunken fellow went to sleep on a sidewalk in Fort Wayne, with some matches in his pocket. In turning over the friction set them on fire. Awakening, and inhaling the sulphuric fumes he exclaimed: "Just as I expected. In hell, (hic) by hokey."

Never marry a girl for her money, but for her industry and knowledge of washing, ironing and housekeeping.

TO FARMERS.

AGRICULTURAL WORKS AT

S. KUEBLER'S,

BLACKSMITH and WAGON MAKING SHOP

JASPER, INDIANA,

To buy cheap, for money down, Come to Jasper, it's the town:

Farmers and all who want to buy, Unruly your greenbacks, and draw nigh:

For S. Kuebler has for sale The best Plows, wheelbarrow or retail;

Buggies, Carriages, silver bright; With farming implements all right.

The McIntosh Plow—no better made: Come one and all, let's have a trade.

Corn-plows and Cultivators new, Mowing machines and Reapers, too;

Wagons of all kinds, ready done; Hay rakes we're sure are No. one;

With many other things all nice, So just come in, and learn the price:

Then if you don't want to buy, There'll be no harm 'twixt you and I.

A few good jobs have been made, I confess, Whose success has depended on copying from me:

But unlike the printer—to borrow who must— They fail to give credit, and yet call it just.

With labor, skill, genius to superintend, New improvements I make, which the public commend:

And when I've succeeded and got a good thing, The next thing I know it's on another machine!

But something else I've got to say, Do not forget me in the pay:

When iron I buy, or lumber, as you see, Nothing but money will pay me you;

So come and pay the old account, And make a new one, good and sound;

Now do not put it off too far, With money in your pocket, and to spare.

And remember, I hesitate not to say, The work we make must be O. K.
